WHO TO SAVE, NOT JUST HOW TO SAVE

On Saturday and Sunday, a team of physicians, philosophers, sociologists, psychiatrists, nurses, clergy and attorneys discussed the ethical dilemma of organ transplants. Issues discussed included the waiting lines for organ transplants, financial resources and emotional aspects. See Med Pulse on page

BOTH SIDES FORM GROUPS ON CAMPUS

The recent Supreme Court decision that allows individual states to impose limits on abortion has rekindled the flames of controversy. In response to that decision, two student groups, Students for Choice and Students for Life, have been formed to spread their respective messages.

How does it taste? UNO wrestler Kevin Phelps force feeds a Nebraska Cornhusker a mouthful of mat Thursday night. The Mavs took the fourth-ranked Huskers to the last match of the dual, but eventually fell. The Mavericks, ranked second in Division II, didn't have it much easier Saturday. Central Oklahoma State, the only team ranked higher than UNO in Division II, shoved a 20-15 loss down the Mavs throat. Bill may stiffen drug penalties

Students could face disenrollment

By GREG KOZOL

College students in Nebraska could face stiffer penalties for failing to "just say no."

Legislative Bill 1226 would require state college and university students to undergo rehabilitation following their first drug-related offense. A student refusing treatment would be suspended and would lose all state and federal financial aid.

Although the state cannot suspend private school students, the same penalties regarding financial aid would also apply to those institutions.

A second drug-conviction would bring automatic suspension and loss of financial aid until rehabilitation is completed.

State Sen. Elroy Hefner, who introduced the bill, said the proposal would have a positive effect on the campuses. "I think it will help stop drugs."

According to Hefner, the bill is based on Gov. Kay Orr's proposal for stricter drug laws against college students.

"I toned it down a bit from the original plan," Hefner said.

But not all state senators agree with Hefner. Sen. Ron Withem, chairman of the Unicameral's Education Committee, said the bill may not have been toned down enough.

"I really don't have a strong opinion," Withem said, "but it seems to be an overly harsh sort of penalty."

The Education Committee will hold a public hearing on the bill today.

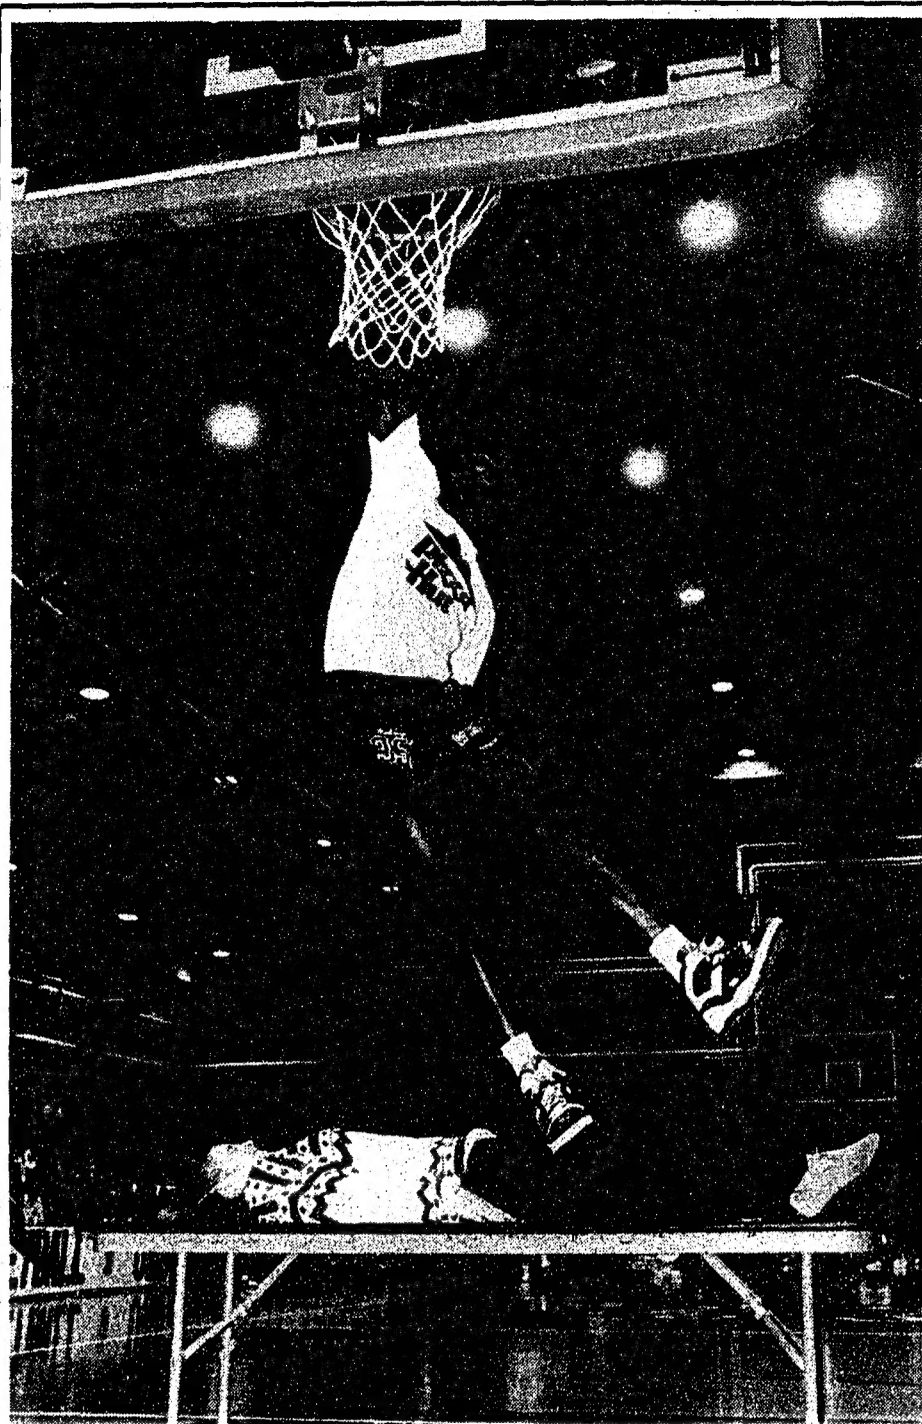

Withem said the proposal may not rid the campuses of drugs.

"It doesn't get to the root of the problem, like the over-abundance of drugs and the lack of self-esteem among users," he said.

However, the drug problem needs to be addressed, Withem said.

"There is a tremendous problem with drugs in high school," he said. "I don't know to what extent the problem is in college. But I don't know if kicking kids out of college is the answer."

Also under the proposal, college students would be asked to sign a statement declaring

Not all UNO students head for the snack bar during halftime. Chris Crutchfield, a UNO junior, spent the intermission of Saturday's Maverick basketball game participating in the UNO slam-dunk contest. Here, Crutchfield jumps over an occupied table and soars toward the rim for the jam. The contest was held as part of Black History Month. UNO junior Victor Barnes finished first in the dunk competition.

System may have to absorb costs

Regents request additional state funds

By JOHN WATSON

Hey buddy, can you spare about $13 million?

The University of Nebraska system has requested $13 million in additional funds from the State Legislature's Appropriations Committee to cover additional costs, according to University of Nebraska Board of Regents Chairman Don Blank.

Blank

The university requested $5.1 million in additional funds for the current year and $7.5 million for next year.

Blank said the university operates on a biannual budget approved by the Legislature last year. The Unicameral approved more than $470 million for that budget.

"This is a pretty normal procedure every off year of the budget," he said.

The additional funds were requested to cover costs not included in the original budget. Blank said the money will be used to, among other things, help fund the removal of asbestos from Burnett Hall on the University of Nebraska-Lincoln campus, a new family practice program and retirement programs.

Federal regulations regarding the retirement plan were changed after the budget was approved, he said.

"The majority of the new costs were for retirement," Blank said. "Then we found we weren't being fair to everybody. That's the reason we came back."

If the requests are not approved, he said the university must cover the additional costs.

"If they (the Legislature) don't approve the requests we'll just have to absorb the costs in retirement."

Some Legislators were concerned how the regents plan to use the extra funds.

During the Appropriation's Committee meeting in January, some senators questioned the decision of the regents to decentralize student records and return them to the individual campuses.

"Last January (1989), the regents voted to move student records," Blank said. "They thought we were going to move computers — hardware and software, the whole ball of wax. We have no plans to change that."

He said the regents only transferred the responsibility of supervising some of the records to UNO. The student records will remain on the UNL campus. The University of Nebraska Medical Center has its own student-record computer system.

"The move didn't require any additional funds," Blank said. "That's what they were concerned about."

He said a decision on the request should be handed down when the Legislature's session ends April 9.

Until the request is approved, Blank said the university should have little trouble adjusting to the deficit.

"We may have some problems, but that's not too far down the road," Blank said.

Activism on the upswing

Students and campuses will become more radical and activist during the 1990s, Wilmington College History Professor Vinton Prince predicts.

"Each generation of students this century has tended to play off or reject the values of the previous one," said Prince, who has traced the cycles of college activism.

"Activism has been on the downslide long enough that the rhythm of history suggests things will start up again," Prince said.

"The cycle is beginning to move," he added. "Over the last several years there has been a creeping back to the left."

Prince's observations mirror the annual survey of college freshmen conducted jointly by the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles, which found a rise in student activism among freshmen enrolled in 1989.

A record number of freshmen — 36.7 percent — reported in the survey they had participated in an organized political demonstration during their senior year in high school.

Prince said the radical movements will begin at the University of California at Berkeley and at campuses in Boston.

"Most trends originate on one coast and leapfrog to similar kinds of schools. Then they pattern down to the heartlands."

'You can call me racist'

For the second time in as many weeks, Nation of Islam Leader Louis Farrakhan inadvertently has put a campus in turmoil.

Michigan State University's Board of Trustees ordered the campus's provost Feb. 2 to drop a plan to give $5,000 to a student group to bring to campus the controversial speaker, whose opinions on Zionism and Jewish theology have caused his detractors to call him anti-Semitic and racist.

At Northern Illinois University, the student government agreed to charge admission to cover the costs of Farrakhan's Jan. 30 visit, instead of using student fees, after Jewish students raised objections.

At that speech, which followed an anti-racism protest by about 200 Northern Illinois students, Farrakhan said racism isn't necessarily bad and there's nothing wrong with being committed to one's people.

"You can call me racist because I am committed to black people. I am not ashamed of that. I refuse to allow anybody to make me feel bad because I love black people," he told about 4,000 students.

The decision by Michigan State's trustees to bar using university money to pay for Farrakhan's Feb. 18 visit followed vehement protest from student, faculty and community leaders.

Maybe the team is a little bit spoiled

Some people really have the nerve. Take, for instance, UNO men's basketball coach Bob Hanson and his team. The guys seem to be a little pissed that the Gateway published a cover photo of Tony Barone, Creighton University's men's basketball coach, on the Feb. 9 issue.

After defeating Mankato State Saturday night in the Fieldhouse, the UNO team refused to be interviewed by our sports editor. One player said: "I thought the Gateway was UNO's newspaper."

Quite an insightful observation. Makes us wonder if the players — and their coach — even have been reading their student newspaper in the past few months. Maybe they have forgotten the two front covers they were given, Nov. 28, 1989 and Jan. 23, 1990. We have extra copies if you missed them.

STAFF EDITORIAL

Besides covers, their student newspaper has published 18 stories on the UNO men's basketball team since its season began, a couple of those made it in before the first game.

As for photos, the team has not been camera shy. The Gateway has published 14 photos, including a two-page spread on the Mavs' match-up with Morningside College and South Dakota about three weeks ago. We have also run individual features on almost every starting player in the team's line up.

You can bet no other UNO organization has received that much press in the past two months. Yet, the team is still miffed. Maybe the guys are getting a little spoiled.

On Jan. 26, the Gateway began a new series, "Coaches Corner," about local coaches. Barone was the third coach in that series which also featured the USHL Omaha Lancer's coach Frank Serratore and Robert Faulkner, a three-sport coach at Flanagan High School. Like Barone, neither of the previous two coaches interviewed had a direct tie to UNO.

I DUNNO! I WAS JUST HUMMIN' THAT 'Bird is the word' Commercial!

Face it folks, UNO is commuter campus with a primarily apathetic student body. Apathetic toward UNO politics, events and, yes, hard to admit, UNO athletics.

We admitted that fact last June when the current staff started working at the Gateway.

We decided that UNO students' interests were not limited to activities and events only at this campus. That decision was made by staff members who are also UNO students with interests outside the university community. Since our first issue, we have tried to reflect that sentiment.

The Gateway is not a public relations organization for the university. It is a newspaper. We do not exist for the pleasure of only certain students involved in certain activities on this campus. We try to reach every student, including the one who hides in a cubicle on the third floor of the library. And maybe that student cares a little more about Tony Barone than Bob Hanson.

If we had wanted to, we could have ran a front page photo of Hanson landing on his ass after being shoved by an opposing coach two weeks ago. Is that the kind of coverage UNO Athletics wants?

The Gateway only 'has' to do one thing

Whoever said the Gateway was the student paper of UNO was wrong.

Oh, that's what every Gateway staff since the dawn of time has striven to be, including the current one. The members of the UNO community make up the biggest chunk of our readership, primarily because UNO is where the papers are delivered.

But it shouldn't limit any Gateway staff from boldly venturing out across Dodge Street, through Elmwood Park or past the circulation road for news, sports or entertainment articles.

When someone lashes out with the typical misconception that this newspaper "has" to cover anything/everything on campus, we lash back — hard.

The editors of this publication, because of the First Amendment and, surprisingly, the Board of Regents, don't "have" to cover anything they don't want to, and never have.

Since 1918, when the University of Nebraska Board of Regents first allowed for student publications, the editorial policies have been entirely in the hands of the student editors.

In 1981, the university-wide Student Publications Committee endorsed this enlightened position, as well as another one: "The student press should be free of censorship and advance approval of copy, and its editors and managers should be free to develop their own editorial policies and news coverage."

DAVE MANNING

We, ultimately, are responsible for our actions. The Publications Committee is technically our publisher, and so is the Board of Regents. But if we screw up, heads roll here first.

The Gateway only "has" to do one thing — produce a paper twice weekly, following as close to journalistic ethics and principles as its editors can.

It does not have to cover any sporting events, the actions (or lack thereof) of any student governing body or the policy changes of any administrative group on this campus.

That's one of the purposes of the First Amendment: guaranteeing the freedom of the press. Freedom from constraints put on it by outside groups.

But along with that freedom this newspaper, at least, has a sort of responsibility to cover campus news, entertainment or sports. Likewise, however, the Gateway has the responsibility to show its audience things off campus, too.

We even ran a story and accompanying photo on the new Brady Bunch. While that may not have appealed to everyone, someone out there may have enjoyed it. Maybe.

Barone busters

To the Editor:

Why in the hell was Tony Barone, Creighton University's men's basketball coach, on the cover of the last issue of the Gateway? Do you think UNO men's basketball coach Bob Hanson would be on the cover of the Creightonian (Creighton's student newspaper)?

If you are desperate for cover material, may we offer a suggestion: Find someone or something that remotely pertains to our university. The story on Barone was fine. A cover photo was ridiculous.

'Paupers' an overstatement

To the Editor:

Although columnist Dave Manning in the Feb. 6 issue of the Gateway presents an interesting analogy between the West German Mercedes and the East German Wartburg, he perpetuates some common misconceptions about the two Germanies. (By the way, East Germany's name is the German Democratic Republic (GDR), not the People's Republic.)

It is true that the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) is considerably farther advanced technologically than its eastern counterpart, but we should not forget that the GDR is economically the strongest of the Eastern-Bloc nations and is counted among the leading industrial nations of the world. To call it "a nation of relative paupers" is an overstatement.

Mr. Manning gives the impression that Helmut Kohl has the power to decide whether or not to accept reunification of the two Germanies. Actually, the constitutions of both East and West Germany were conceived as provisional and called for the eventual reunification of the two parts. Furthermore, the FRG constitution grants full rights of citizenship, including the right to vote to Germans living in the GDR. Kohl alone may not change the constitution of his own country; accepting East Germans has nothing to do with his politeness, as Manning implies. What shape a reunified Germany would take would be up to the Germans: whether it would be militarily aligned to East or West or whether it would, like Austria, choose to be neutral.

I doubt that a unified Germany would be weaker than either of the two component nations. Economic cooperation has already begun, for example, between Lufthansa and Interflug and between Volkswagen and Trabant. And unemployed West German physicians are finding jobs in the East.

Let us be cautious about using terms such as "absorption of an entire nation." My impression is that the Germans are talking about unification, not takeover.

Students for Choice want to clear the air

By DAMON GRAN

A UNO pro-choice group is organizing and currently awaits Student Government's approval of its constitution.

Deb Reay and Bob King said they founded Students for Choice as an offshoot of the Pro-Choice Coalition of Nebraska.

"I attended meetings with the Pro-Choice Coalition as part of a practicum last summer. I expressed an interest to start a group on campus, so Bob (King) and I organized it," said Reay, a graduate student majoring in social work.

Students for Choice held its first organizational meeting last semester.

"We were very enthusiastic about our first meeting and the great interest students showed in getting involved in the pro-choice cause," Reay said.

King, a junior majoring in accounting, said the group hopes to educate students on all aspects of the pro-choice movement.

"So much misinformation is disseminated by the anti-choice groups—causing many students to become confused," King said. "We're here to clear that ambiguity."

Reay said pro-choice beliefs extend beyond the abortion issue.

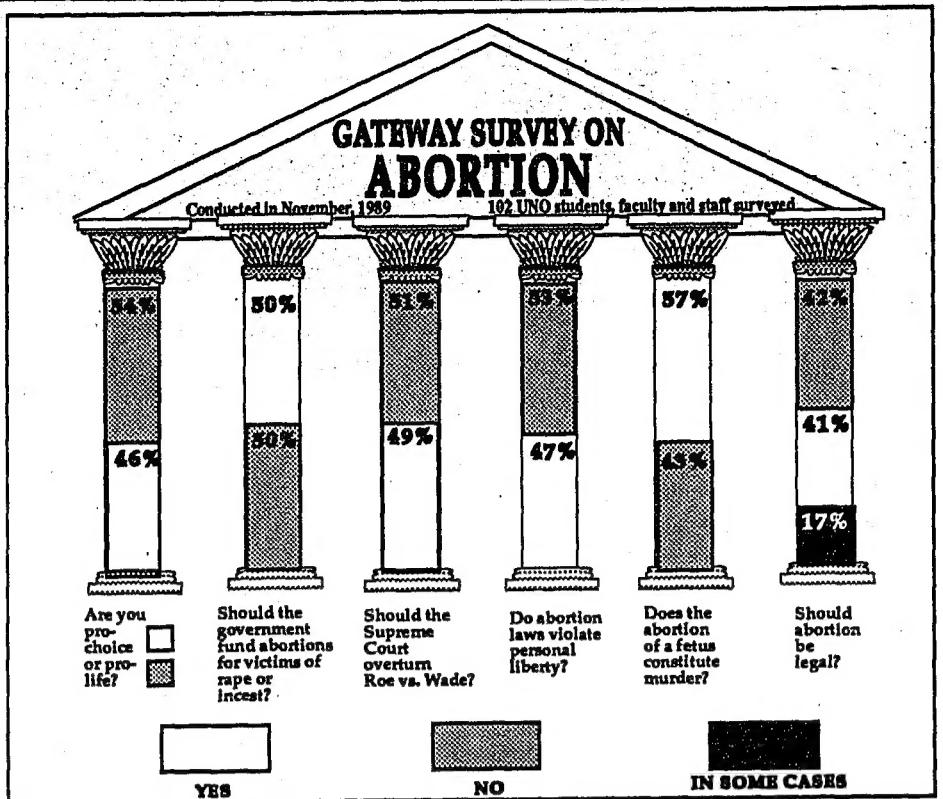

"We offer information sharing, we point interested pro-choice advocates toward positive programs and other activities," she said.

The group also hopes to promote awareness of the various pro-choice agencies available, she said.

As part of its education format, Reay said Students for Choice sponsors speakers based on the group's interest.

She said a July Supreme Court decision prompted the Students for Choice group. That ruling did not reverse the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized abortion, but it does allow states to impose limits on abortion.

"The anti-choice groups have been together since 1973. They have a pretty solid organization," King said. "We are new because we had the protection of the U.S. Constitution. Now those rights are being infringed on and we need to be heard."

The Students for Choice foundation, Reay said, focuses on an individual's fundamental right to privacy.

"We cannot have the states impose religious beliefs on anyone," she said. "To be truly pro-choice you do what is right for you without having other beliefs imposed upon you."

Reay said she is unsure when Student Government will vote on the group's constitution.

Students for Life provide constant 'ethic of life'

By AMY BUCKINGHAM

Although Teresa Houser did not seek re-election as president of UNO Students for Life, she will remain supportive of the group's ideals.

As founder of the group, Houser said she has formed a good foundation for growth.

"We are still in our formative period," Houser said. "But everything is in motion."

The group has grown to 30 members since its constitution was submitted to Student Government for approval last November, Houser said. The group's constitution was approved by the Student Senate's Rules Committee Friday and will now go before entire senate Feb. 23.

"That's without any membership drives or promotion," she said. "The wheels are in motion."

According to Houser, some people would label the group as "radical."

"We are not radical," she said. "We are a legitimate student organization, just like any other student organization. We abide by the same rules as every other student organization."

Houser resigned as Chief Administrative Officer of Student Government to start Students for Life.

Although she said the decision was difficult, things have worked out.

"I was becoming very dissatisfied with Student Government," she said. "I knew if I remained in Student Government and was in charge of Students for Life there would be problems."

"I guess when it comes down to it, I didn't want to be accused of a conflict of interest."

However, Houser said she did not start the group until a UNO pro-choice organization was formed.

She said she had no trouble finding members once she began to form the group. A stable membership is one reason she said she did not seek re-election.

Although Houser will no longer head Students for Life, she said she will remain active in pursuing group goals.

"My heart will always be in this issue," she said. "I think it's important to emphasize that the purpose for Students for Life isn't just to oppose abortion. It is to provide a consistent ethic of life."

She said that "ethic of life" includes war, peace, ecology, the environment and euthanasia.

"I think we need to take a good hard look at what God has given us and learn to respect and enjoy it," she said.

On Friday, the group elected Erica Johnson to replace Houser as president.

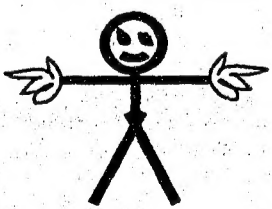

Johnson said as one of her main goals, she would like to narrow the scope of the group's efforts.

"We now need to form some general planning objectives and focus the attention of the group," Johnson said.

Policy creates student organization controversy

By PATRICK RUNGE

Three may be a crowd, but now it takes at least six to make a student organization.

A revised UNO policy now requires recognized student organizations to have a minimum of six members. Those members must also be registered students. Organization rosters will be checked with the Registrar's Office to ensure compliance with the policy.

According to Vice Chancellor for Educational and Student Services Richard Hoover, the policy was proposed by a University Committee for Student Affairs subcommittee in an effort to improve student organizations.

"If an organization can't get six members then the Student Affairs Committee should take a look at that," Hoover said.

Both Chancellor Del Weber and the Student Affairs committee approved the policy.

The committee will discuss implementation of the policy today.

Although it has received administrative approval, the policy does not have total support.

"By requiring six students, it will eliminate student organizations that have been established for a good, long time," said Virgil Armendariz Jr., director of Student Government's American Multicultural Students Agency.

According to Armendariz, organizations at risk from the new plan include a number of organizations in the foreign language department, two black fraternities and two black sororities.

Hoover said the committee had no intention to eliminate student organizations. "It was designed to make them more viable," he said.

But Armendariz said the new policy would be detrimental to some student organizations. "Some organizations will have problems with it on a continual basis," he said.

According to Armendariz, the changing nature of the student body will make it difficult for some organizations to maintain the minimum student-member requirement.

But Hoover said the Student Affairs Committee asked the Office of Student Activities how many organizations would be affected by the new policy. "They couldn't give us a definite answer," he said.

While the minimum student-member rule could have a negative effect on some minority student organizations, Armendariz said it is not exclusively a minority issue.

"When I joined the Hispanic Student Organization in 1987 there was only one member," Armendariz said. "Now it is one of the best organizations on campus. It never would have gotten started under the six member rule."

Hoover said he is aware the policy may have some adverse affects.

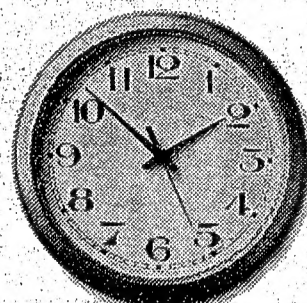

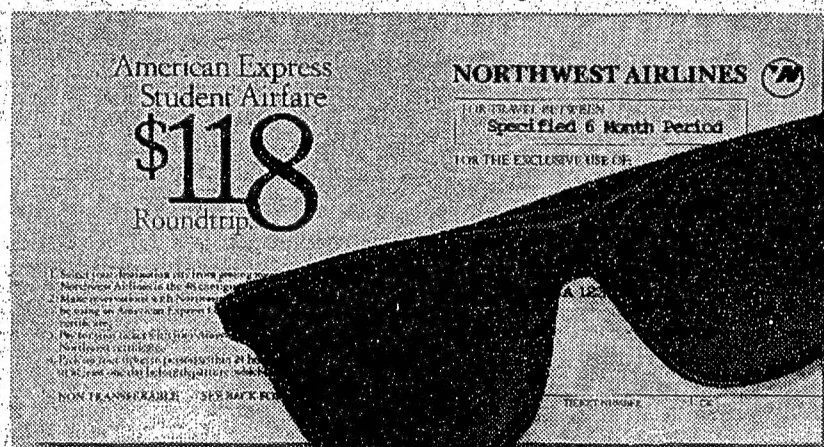

"The difficulty we have is that no one has tried this yet," he said. "It could be that some organizations are affected and we have to pay attention to that."

Armendariz said the policy should include a grandfather clause to protect existing organizations.

"The implementation of the rule is still flexible," Armendariz said. "Nothing is set in stone."

Panel discusses ethics and cost of saving lives

By GREG KOZOL

The medical profession may have become a victim of its own success.

Dr. Carl Greiner, psychiatry professor and director of Consultation and Liaison Affairs at the University of Nebraska Medical Center, said medical advances have raised the question of who to save, not just how to save.

On Saturday and Sunday, a team of physicians, philosophers, sociologists, psychiatrists, nurses, clergy and attorneys discussed the ethical dilemma of organ transplants.

The operations have raised several ethical questions in the last 30 years, Greiner said.

"We do have a problem because we have such successful procedures," Greiner said. "If something doesn't work no one wants it. But how do you fund such successful technology?"

About 70 percent of liver-transplant patients survive at least one year, Greiner said. But conversely, 25,000 to 120,000 people await kidney transplants each year.

This waiting line raises the question of deciding who gets the organs, Greiner said.

"The ethical issue develops out of scarcity," Greiner said. "Anytime there is a limited amount of anything the question is how do you choose?"

Cost can become a factor.

Greiner said a kidney transplant costs $120,000 for hospital fees, $33,000 for physician fees, $153,000 for the operation and $12,000 for medication.

"One question is, do you have the financial resources?" he said. "I hate to say it, but it's true."

The United States is one of the few industrialized countries without a national health care system to counteract medical costs.

MED PULSE

"There needs to be some kind of national health insurance," he said.

But Greiner said countries with national insurance also have seen health-care costs skyrocket.

National health care is not a "utopian" solution, he said.

Another factor in receiving an organ transplant, Greiner said, is the seriousness of a patient's illness.

"If you are more likely to die from surgery," he said, "you won't get the surgery."

Patients believed to be emotionally unable to handle a transplant may also be turned away, Greiner said.

"The ethical question is, are you more worthy than an indigent person?" he said.

The two-day conference did not find any immediate solutions to the dilemma, Greiner said. "There are only difficult choices."

But the wide range of professionals provided different views to the discussion, Greiner said.

"With our diverse backgrounds, study group members brought a wealth of knowledge and experience to the meeting," he said. "Because transplantation is such a complex issue it will take our collective wisdom to develop sensible guidelines."

One proposal, he said, was to develop an ethics center in Omaha. "We need to work together in an ongoing way."

But even the most brilliant minds will not solve this problem.

"It's not like someone is smart enough to keep this from being difficult," he said. "It will still be difficult."

The discussion included professionals from UNO, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, the Medical Center and Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H.

they are aware of the penalties of a drug-related conviction.

Richard Wood, University of Nebraska general counsel, said the policy does not seem unreasonable.

"I think institutions have the authority to put in those codes of conduct," he said.

Some schools in the NU system, Wood said, have penalties for students convicted of a drug-related offenses on campus.

However, Wood said the bill could run into problems because it would penalize students for off-campus convictions.

"It goes beyond campus life," he said. "I think that is something that needs to be looked at very carefully."

Under UNO's current code of conduct, students are penalized for drug-related offenses on campus but are not penalized for off-campus convictions.

Hefner insists increasing the penalties will take a bite out of drug use.

"I feel we need to get started some place, and this would be a place to get started," he said.

Mavericks post weekend sweep

Build win streak to four straight

By TONY FLOTT

The UNO men's basketball team will be a little different this year.

They won't finish 14-14.

With a 92-75 victory over St. Cloud State Friday and a 71-64 win over Mankato State Saturday, the Mavericks improved their record to 16-6, the first time in three years they will not finish 14-14.

"They're playing good together," UNO Coach Bob Hanson said of his team. "I think they're comfortable with each other. Our chemistry is good."

Saturday's win over Mankato State pushed UNO into second place in the North Central Conference with a 9-4 mark.

"That was a really good win and was, again, because of our defense," Hanson said.

UNO's defense limited Mankato State to a 35 percent effort from the field.

Its biggest contribution came after Mankato State had taken a 48-46 lead midway through the second half.

"It was our wing pressure that turned the game around," Hanson said. "With the wing pressure and containment at the point, all of a sudden, we have them shooting their three's two or three feet further out."

"They were passing very smoothly for a period of time there. I thought we were just going through the motions defensively."

Hanson said he got the wing pressure he wanted when he substituted Thor Palamore for Dan Olson.

Palamore took over defensive chores on Mankato State's Chris Conlan, the NCC's fifth-leading three-point shooter.

"When Conlan missed his three's he was moving and he had to catch it and shoot it with pressure on him," Hanson said. "Before he was catching it and getting set and shooting it."

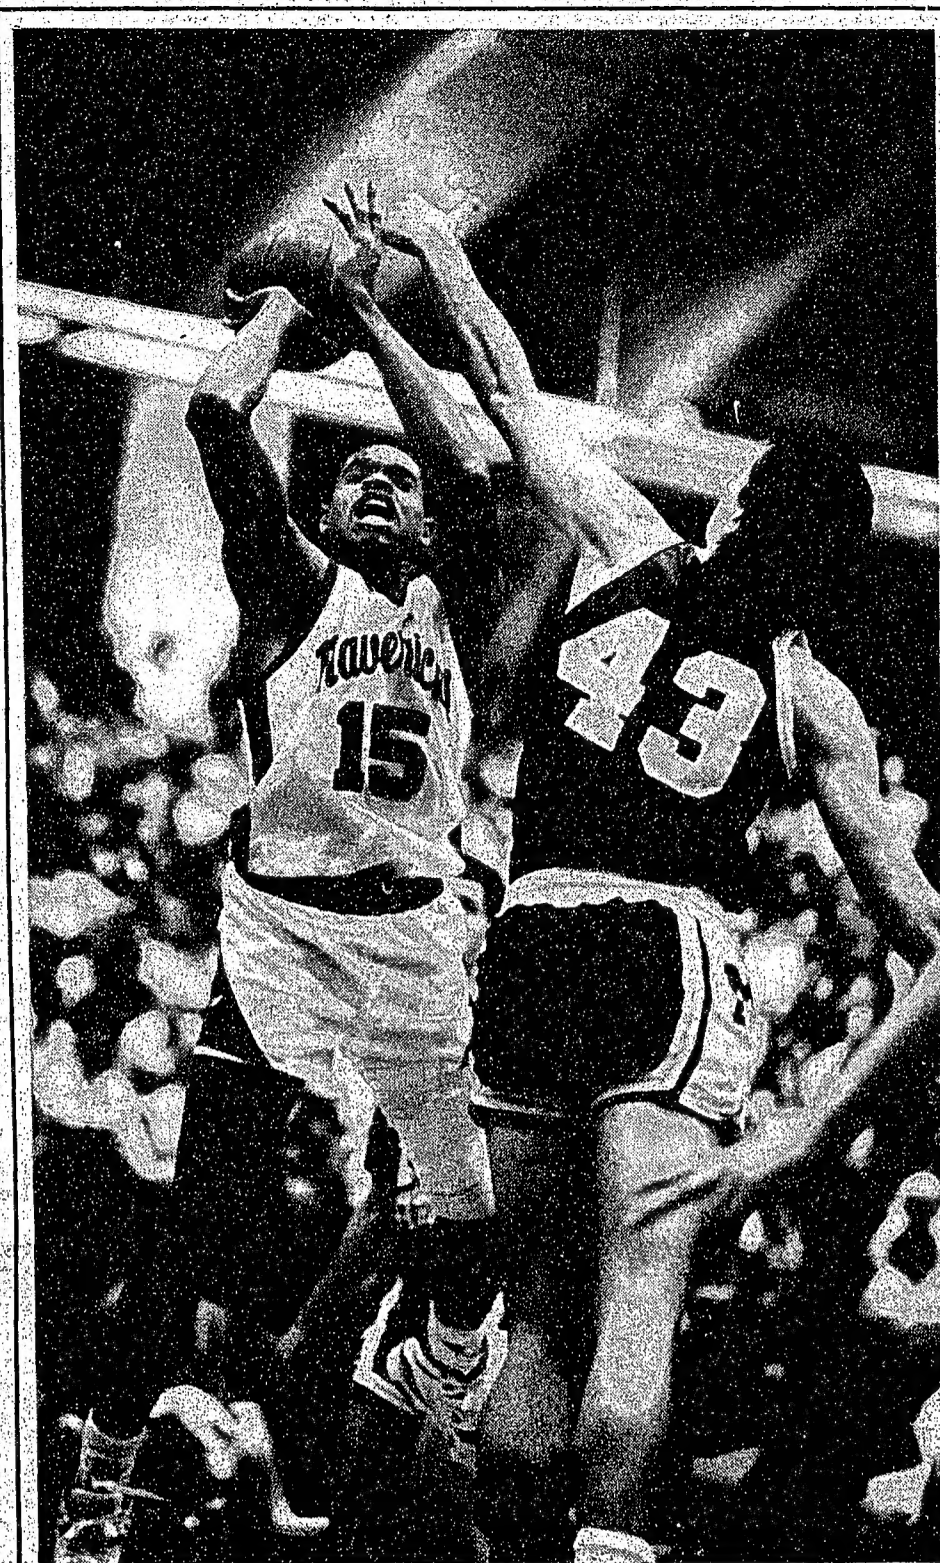

Mankato State, the NCC's top three-point shooting team, was 9-22 from long distance. Most of their misses came during a 23-10 UNO run that put the Mavericks in control.

UNO led by as many as 12 points down the stretch before Mankato State pared it to the final score.

"Our biggest key now is just getting our team to protect a lead and take care of the ball and take some time off the clock," Hanson said.

One key for UNO in both games was its scoring contribution, Hanson said.

The Mavericks had four players reach double figures Saturday night, led by guard

— ERIC FRANCIS

Trent Neal's 18 points.

Against St. Cloud State, the Mavericks had five players rack up double digits. Phil Cartwright was the team leader with 20 points.

"I thought it was really balanced," Hanson said. "That's the way I like it."

Senior forward Dan Olson led UNO in rebounding both nights with 10 against the Huskies and seven against Mankato State.

Hanson said the Maverick wins put them in good shape heading into their game with South Dakota.

"It probably put a little separation between some of the teams," Hanson said. "But there's a lot of games left. We got a tough game next Friday, I know that for sure."

Lady Mavs overcome losing skid

By JODEE JENSEN

The UNO women's basketball team put the brakes on their longest losing streak of the season with a 74-66 win over Mankato State Saturday night.

After losing to St. Cloud State Friday night, the Lady Mavs losing streak had grown to five games.

But with a balanced scoring effort Saturday, UNO improved to 11-12 overall and 5-8 in the North Central Conference.

"We played with great intensity and pushed them for turnovers with our 2-2-1 full court press," UNO Coach Cherri Mankenberg said.

UNO's press helped create 22 Mankato State turnovers.

Pacing the Lady Mavs, freshman center Sandy Skradski had a team-high 14 points.

Skradski, an Omaha Gross graduate, was making her third-straight start.

"Our leading scorer, Darcy Burns, had a sub-par night so I was glad to see the other players pick up the slack," Mankenberg said.

Burns finished with 13 points while Tricia Floyd and Laura Larson each added 12 points.

UNO was also accurate Saturday night, hitting 50 percent from the field and 75 percent from the free throw line.

After being at a size disadvantage in recent games, the Lady Mavs outrebounded Mankato State 41-32.

The Lady Mavs were helped by their largest crowd of the season. An estimated 2,800 fans showed up for Saturday night's game.

"I felt that the huge crowd, which included many cheering girl scout troops, had an impact on the teams playing," Mankenberg said.

Saturday was Girl Scout night at the Fieldhouse.

Despite the five-game skid, Larson doesn't harbor any regrets about the season or her career.

"It has been a lot of fun playing with everyone and watching them get better," she said.

"In a few years they are going to be a great team," Larson said. "They really work hard and want to do well. I am going to miss all of this when I graduate."

The Lady Mavs will travel to South Dakota next Friday and to Morningside College Saturday.

FROM THE SIDELINES

SPORTS OPINION BY TONY FLOTT

Drop the double standard

If you picked up Friday's Gateway, you undoubtedly noticed a rather robust man on the cover inviting you to pick up a copy.

Wait a minute, that's Tony Barone, Creighton University's head basketball coach. What's he doing on the cover, I thought the Gateway was a UNO paper?

Yeah, it's a UNO paper. But please don't tell me I can't write a story or run a cover photo on someone from outside the University of Nebraska system.

The Barone story students saw Friday is part of a weekly series on Omaha coaches.

Notice the operative word here is Omaha coaches, not just UNO coaches.

Nevertheless, UNO basketball coach Bob Hanson, his team and various others in the athletic department are upset with the Gateway for running the Barone feature.

I figured they might be a little jealous, but the men's basketball team thought it was so bad they refused to be interviewed by Gateway reporters following their win over Mankato State.

The main thing the Maverick cagers tried to impress upon me was that the Gateway is a UNO paper.

What they might not realize, however, is that the Gateway attains 30 percent of its revenue from the University.

The other 70 percent is generated by advertising revenue.

The athletic department doesn't go out and earn that advertising revenue, we do. Therefore, there is little justification in saying we are to cover UNO sports.

We are not a public relations firm for UNO that pushes Maverick sports like goodwill ambassadors to the rest of the city.

Why didn't we hear complaints when we ran cover photos of other people outside the NU system?

Martin Luther King Jr. was on the Jan. 16 cover and a ground hog was on the cover Feb. 2.

Why didn't Bob Hanson or his team complain to me then?

It sounds like they hold a double standard. It's OK to do stories on subjects outside the university, but if it has to do with sports, you can only feature Mavericks.

Not granting an interview is a rather immature act of retaliation. It's as if they are blackmailing the Gateway to run nothing but stories involving UNO.

Can it be true that UNO's 16,000 students are only interested in Maverick sports?

Hell no.

The Tony Barone story was a damn good one. It should be judged on its own merits, not how many times UNO is mentioned.

New rule loosens NCAA grip

College Press Service — Nebraska campuses can ignore penalties imposed on their sports programs by the NCAA if the NCAA doesn't strictly follow constitutional rules when it investigates them, state legislators decided.

In a direct rebuke of the NCAA's practice of investigating member schools' sports programs and punishing them without letting them defend themselves, Gov. Kay Orr signed into law a bill that prevents the NCAA from penalizing any Nebraska schools without following due process.

The bill will become a law July 8 and will also make the NCAA liable for any money its sanctions cost a school.

The measure could set up legal confrontation with the NCAA that, in turn, could greatly diminish the NCAA's power to regulate how member schools recruit and pay athletes.

"The process our members have set up does provide for due process," maintained NCAA spokesman Jim Marchiony.

Asked if he thought the NCAA will be affected by the Nebraska bill, Marchiony replied, "Not at all."

The bill's sponsor was State Sen. Ernie Chambers, a constant advocate of sports reform. For the past nine years, he has championed legislation to pay college football players in the state, arguing they should share in the ticket and television revenues they help create.

Chambers first introduced the due process bill last year in response to a 1988 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that the NCAA is a private, voluntary association and, consequently, doesn't have to comply with constitutional due process requirements when it punishes.

The case involved University of Nevada-Las Vegas men's basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian. The NCAA placed UNLV on two-year probation in 1977 for violating 38 recruiting rules, including 10 by Tarkanian himself.

A Nevada state court ruled the sanctions were unfair because a NCAA investigator was biased against Tarkanian, but the high court reversed the decision.

Nation's best slip past UNO

By JIM ANDERSON

The UNO wrestling team took on two of the nation's top-rated teams Thursday and Saturday, narrowly falling to both.

The Mavericks, ranked No. 2 in NCAA Division II, tackled the Nebraska Cornhuskers Thursday night. The Huskers are ranked No. 4 in Division I.

With an estimated 1,300 people looking on, the Mavs took an early lead before falling 20-15.

"A lot of matches could have gone either way," UNO Coach Mike Denney said. "One match could have made the difference."

Despite the absence of Jason Kelber, ranked No. 2 at 134 pounds in Division I, the Huskers still entered Thursday's dual as favorites.

However, the Mavericks showed little sign of being intimidated.

"One of our goals was to take it to them and we did," Denney said. "Every match we got the first takedown."

"We battled them the whole time. I don't think they got a major decision in the match."

UNO got an early boost against the Huskers with decisions from Ted Nelson at 118 pounds and Ron Higdon at 126 pounds to grab a quick 6-0 lead.

After Mark Passer at 134 pounds dropped a 2-1 decision to Dave Droegemueller, the Mav's Scott Ruff received a forfeit to make it 12-3.

Husker Paul Herrera then quieted the crowd with a 12-10 decision over Kevin Phelps cutting UNO's lead to 12-6.

Denney praised Phelps who wrestled for the first time since early January.

"Phelps did one hell of a job," Denney said. "Herrera is one of the best wrestlers in the nation. He is tough and has beaten a lot of good people in Division I."

Herrera's win started the Huskers rolling. Decisions from Paul Enger at 158 pounds and Scott Chenoweth at 167 pounds knotted the score at 12.

In the 177 pound weight class, UNO's Joe Wypiszewski scored an 8-5 win over Corey Olson.

The "Whipper," as his teammates call him, trailed in the match 5-3 with 13 seconds remaining. But a nearfall and a takedown gave Wypiszewski the win and the Mavs a 15-12 lead.

Then Huskers' Chris Nelson decided Pat Gentzler tying the match at 15. This set up the heavyweight match between UNO's Dan Carriker and Husker Joe Malecek which would decide the dual.

Malecek entered the match 28-2-1 and ranked No. 3 in Division I.

Carriker, who is listed at 177 pounds in the wrestling program, lost to Malecek by a technical fall 15-0 giving UNL the win.

The heavyweight division was again a thorn

in UNO's side Saturday when the Mavericks faced Central Oklahoma State, Division II's top-ranked team.

UNO led 15-14 heading into the heavyweight showdown between Carriker and Bronco's Matt McCullough.

Carriker scored a takedown with 32 seconds left to take a 4-3 lead. But McCullough got an escape and earned the final point for accumulating 1:39 of riding time.

Denney praised his team's effort against the Broncos.

"The difference between number one and number two is minimal right now," he said. "I think we should feel good to know that we are in it for the national championship."

Denney said the close losses will help prepare his team for the North Central Conference Tournament Feb. 24 at Fargo, ND.

THIS YEAR A LOT OF COLLEGE SENIORS WILL BE GRADUATING INTO DEBT.

Being a new graduate with a loan to pay off can take the fun out of your start in the "real world." But here's an interesting alternative to the burdens of debt: sign up with the Army, and we'll sign off on your loan.

Each year you serve as a soldier, the Army will reduce your college debt by 1/3 or $1,500, whichever amount is greater. So after serving just 3 years, your government loan will be completely paid off.

You're eligible for this program with a National Direct Student Loan, or a Guaranteed Student Loan, or a Federally Insured Student Loan made after October 1, 1975. And the loan can't be in default. (Effective April 1, 1986, it is not possible for a soldier to participate in both the GI Bill education program and the Loan Repayment Program.)

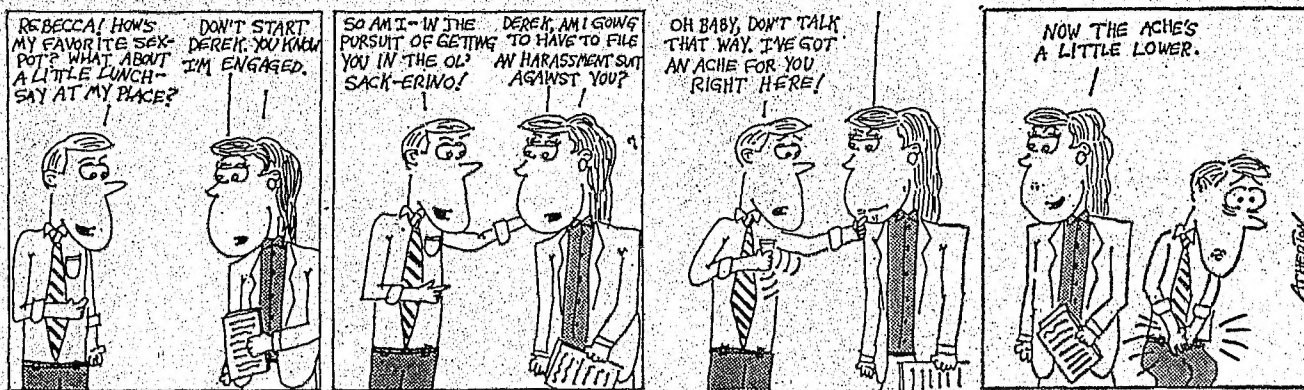

College memories should be fond ones. Keep them that way by taking advantage of the Army's Loan Repayment Program. Your local Recruiter can tell you if your loan qualifies. Call today.
